

The School Book of Forestry

by Charles Lathrop Pack

Written by a third-generation timberman, this book discusses the vital importance of our forests; insect, fire and human enemies; uses of different types of wood; conservation and re-forestation techniques; national vs. private forest management; the danger of the lumber industry's enormous appetite for profits; and the birth of the U.S. National Forest system to ensure a steady supply of lumber and habitat for future generations. - Summary and solo by KHand
